

CME Conference
Men Are From Mars:

Psychiatric Disorders in Males Across the Lifespan
Saturday, September 13, 2014
7:30am-2pm

Overview

This is the second of two conferences focusing on sex/gender as a differentiator in identification, diagnosis, treatment and referral of patients with psychiatric disorders. Men traditionally are less apt to seek mental health treatment for a variety of reasons, and are often more comfortable getting their mental health needs met in the primary care setting. We have assembled a courageous group of professionally successful men to discuss obstacles to, and facilitators of their mental health treatment. Not all males who “hear voices” have a psychotic, or even a psychiatric disorder.

Conference Objectives: Attendees of this program should be able to:

- Define the lifetime testosterone production in men.
- Identify how men present mental health conditions differently than women.
- List two psychosocial stressors for those suffering from psychosis across the male lifespan.
- Identify the differences in pain management between men and women.
- Identify the psychiatric symptoms which present as pain within men.
- Recognize the unique challenges to diagnosis and treatment of mental health conditions within the correctional system.

Who Should Attend

This conference is beneficial for primary care physicians, medical professionals and students, as well as behavioral health professionals. Your attendance positions you and your organization as a community leader in the effort to move the vital work of the Foundation forward. We want to educate and train primary care physicians, other professionals, and individuals within systems of care in the early identification, accurate diagnosis, effective treatment and appropriate referral of patients with psychiatric disorders locally, regionally, nationally, and worldwide.
